SCAV Thanks You For A Great First Year

As 2012 winds down, SCAV will celebrate our first anniversary as a new company after separating from our old relationship. After the first year I am still absolutely certain it was the right thing to do. 2012 has been a very good year and a successful one as well. There were a lot of exciting challenges and hurdles.

I am grateful for our success for several reasons. First it is difficult in this economy to run a small business let alone begin a new one. And even though we had established business and inventory we were classified at as a startup business for 2012. It looks like we passed the first major test.

We passed that milestone for several reasons. First of all, our clients, who faithfully followed us and kept their trust in us to handle their events. Secondly our suppliers who extended us their services so critically necessary to keep our doors open. And of course our friends who helped in so many ways I can't begin to list them. You just can't have enough friends in life and we are fortunate to have great friends.

But most importantly I am grateful to a group of dedicated employees we call our team. These 6 people worked relentlessly to make 2012 a success. There were many hours on the road, out of town, late nights, weekends and time away from their families, friends, and personal events in order to get our job done. They sacrificed untold hours to give our clients the attention we built our reputation on. Our team did everything asked of them and more to make this year a huge success. Anyone can own AV equipment but it takes a special group of people to bring the magic together to make it all work. There is a special group here at SCAV. I will be forever grateful for their efforts to get this venture off the ground in such a positive way. This could not have happened without this group.

So, here we go into 2013 with high expectations of another great year. There is no reason we should expect otherwise. For our valued clients, a heartfelt thank you for your business. We will continue to explore new technology, ideas, and practices to make your events a total success.

Happy Birthday to SCAV, Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all as we go forward into the future together.
